These steps will allow the Samsung Galaxy S10 to go to Google Home. Advances in cancer chemotherapy have been inhibited by lack of a clear understanding of host-tumor interactions. Immunologic mechanisms appear to be important in tumor rejection. A key element in the recognition of tumor antigens by macrophages and lymphocytes is the presence of Fc receptors on these cells. We have shown that in malignant lymphomas, autologous macrophages have Fc receptors and that macrophages from tumor bearing mice do not release their Fc receptors, suggesting that the depletion of macrophages, which are found in tumor tissues, may have positive therapeutical effect. We intend to examine whether or not Fc receptor modulation will alter tumor cell expression of Fc receptors and/or tumor cell IgG and IgM receptor binding capacity. We will study lymphomas, mastocytomas, and sarcomas and determine the correlation of Fc receptor expression and cell function to the ability of macrophages from these tumors to mediate antibody dependent cellular cytotoxicity. The availability of newly developed anti-IgM and Fc receptor antibodies, coupled with the ability to determine various cell surface antigen bearing glycoprotein and glycosaminoglycan expression with specific monoclonal antibodies, should enable us to examine more closely the possible modifications of the cell surface of these tumors and the macrophages. We intend to determine the receptor expression patterns on tumor cells, on macrophages and on NK cells and their effect on effector function. In this manner, we will more clearly define the role of Fc receptor expression on the ability of these effector cells to lyse tumor cells. These studies may enable us to understand tumor cell function in vivo and will help to elucidate host-tumor interactions.
