These organisations have a way of bringing together a lot of brilliant people who are capable of working together on a common cause to get something really great, and there are a lot of organisations that are good at being big tech companies. But there is something about being a truly great startup that makes the world of difference to them. It is no coincidence that the founders of Facebook or Google or Salesforce or Microsoft lived in a certain kind of environment and that they came up with certain kinds of problems. To understand this, I would recommend the book "How Google Works". What would Google be if it was not good at being a startup? It would be nothing. It would just be a really big company, just like Salesforce. In that case, they would all be hiring the same kinds of people, building the same kinds of systems. The co-founders of Google had their heads filled with ideas, and I think that is the same kind of environment that helped drive Facebook, and Microsoft, and Salesforce, and SpaceX. There are no truly great tech companies in the world. There are organisations that are good at being startups. There are organisations that are good at being big companies.
