Beautifully drawn 2D pixel art animation with great attention to detail. Various haunting atmospheric locations to explore, each with their own puzzles and optional routes to take. A carefully crafted blend of puzzling, exploration, platforming and adventure for all ages. Online Leaderboards and Achievements. My name is Alex Silvestri and I am a student of the Institut Supérieur des Arts De Cognitave (International Institute for Arts and Cognition). We are organising the International Conference & Festival of Computer Games in Paris, with the hope of putting in place an Online Game Arcade throughout the conference and beyond. Every participant will have the opportunity to display his work for the entire duration of the conference, while we will also show a selection of the works of attendees who show game demos. This is an initiative of Ars Electronica and the Institut Supérieur des Arts de Cognitave, supported by the Games Institute and the French Games Academy (AjdC). We would be very grateful to have you support this great project! Please contact me at: antigaming.alex@gmail.com Mattollia has been the theme of many of my games to date, so I'm hoping to bring some of that interest together here to make something rather special. I am self-publishing on PC, OSX, and Linux in early 2015. I hope you'll join me to play the first incarnation of Mattollia: - Steam Early Access version (4/5 stars) - IndieDB (9/10 stars) - Gamezebo (9/10 stars) - Indiegamereviews (9/10 stars) - Gameontop (7/10 stars) - Steam Greenlight (7/10 stars) - Humble Bundle (7/10 stars) - Steam Workshop (7/10 stars) - Gamersgate (5/5 stars) Nogami-bis is a short shooting game. This game needs a player who wants to explore the original fields of a building in this city. If you are ready to take on a challenge, it becomes a unique place. We're facing a memory and time shortage, and we're in a deep crisis. But what if the crisis was of our own making? What if we brought about the crisis ourselves? The transhumanist project is the attempt to voluntarily step into a new era

Activation of the c-Myc-Max-Mad network is pivotal for the proliferation of transformed cells. Here we show that the neuronal ING1 protein, an INhibitor of Growth (ING) family member, is involved in c-Myc-Max-Mad transcription. ING1 and Max are co-expressed in brain regions, and they exhibit neuronal sub-cellular distribution in the brain. The ING1-Max-Max and ING1-Max-Mad complexes were identified as distinct protein-protein interaction domains by a mass spectrometry-based approach. In human HeLa cells, ING1 contributes to the Max-Mad signaling and protects HeLa cells from cancer therapeutic treatments. Furthermore, silencing of ING1 in human glioblastoma cell lines U87 and LN229 reduces the expression of MCL-1, which is a key target for the inhibition of apoptosis. Taken together, our results suggest that ING1 may provide an additional molecular target for the control of cancer apoptosis.The present invention relates to the field of measurement instruments, and more particularly to a measurement instrument for evaluating and mapping a surface of interest. Surface mapping is an important and frequently performed measurement or quality control task in many industries, including aerospace, automotive, electronics, and pharmaceutical manufacturing industries. The most common surface mapping methods are based on the principle of colorimetry or colorimetric technology. Colorimetric technology involves illuminating a surface of interest with light of various wavelengths, then employing an appropriate photographic, optical, or video recording technique to capture the resulting reflected light and color. The captured image is analyzed and color coded

, as we honor you. Today we're going to be looking at a few of these college canons and examining them from a historical and philosophical perspective. So without further ado, let's plunge in. But first, let's define what we mean by "college canon"—the body of religious belief which is expected of its students. If you're not already familiar with this term, don't worry—no one has to be. In this case, we're going to be looking at a list of the famous American college canons compiled by the Tufts Committee of Catalysts for World Federalism, and the college canons from Union College in Schenectady, New York. Below I've included the full text of both. On courage and learning

One of the oldest college canons is a statement on learning and courage, written in 1933 by DeWitt Wheeler, the faculty advisor of the Union College Chapel Choir. "Sermons may come easy — theology, but they come cheap. It takes a minister to run the whole length of the tank, — to go through the whole 50-25 or 100-75 before he can say anything to the preacher's great satisfaction, yet wiser and better than what he had before. It takes courage to tell the truth to a congregation, perhaps to the extent of its unpopularity." These days, Mr. Wheeler's statement seems like a good one: we live in a radically different era, yet people still face quite a bit of resistance for speaking out. It's tough, especially if one knows the truth to be good, wise, and beautiful. Still, even in our modern world we don't find someone telling a congregation that they should perform a gay wedding, or turn a blind eye to an adulterer or murder victim, or, as I mentioned on Wednesday, deny the existence of climate change. The concept of tolerance can be a good thing. The idea of respecting others in the face of deeply held beliefs is good. The idea of stopping at racism and not going on to homophobia, sexism, and other forms of bigotry and immorality is good. And we should have liberal bubbles, and options, and private spaces, and are allowed to value selfishness and comfort and not have others think of us or miss us when we'
