I put together this mix for Valentine's Day in Brooklyn and it was an easy choice because I thought it was a perfect marriage of 2 songs that really describe the feeling of love (and fun) in life. I remember making this mix a couple of years ago and getting so inspired that I started to listen to more powerpop and then I hit a wall. I wanted to stop listening to so many powerpop songs, but I knew that I couldn't let those songs go without hearing them one last time. So I reached out to 2 guys who I knew were listening to powerpop. First I found my friend, T.O.P. and then I found my guitarist, Kato, who I really enjoy listening to his heart-felt and snarky powerpop. Now I can listen to it and not be depressed or want to drown in tears. In fact, it makes me smile. Let me know what you think. The guys: T.O.P. and Kato You can also listen to songs from this mixtape on my post from January. Listen to my full discography and download my mix cds for free d41b202975

What's new:

: Worms Gameplay - Part 9 11:36 pm - Worms, part 9 - Strategy, building and some new features (Going to be in a kinda rambling way here...) So, we've done some strategy, using tunnels and direct assaults. But what happens when you're between bases in Wombat Nest? I went for a hovercraft this time, because I think it's best when fighting for territory. So I took a few shots up the line and destroyed two bases. This prompts the enemy to send out their basic hovercrafts in an attempt to expand their territory in the area. At which point we use our tactics of pouncing, exploding and landing mines. It all turns into a bit of a button mashing game, in which we continue and we finally push forwards to a division and potential victory. I also made another hoover and it turns out that, in getting a few behind it, makes for a pretty good bullet hobo. (At least I'm not using version 1 of the engine) - I think the goblin hoover has too small a hit point pool. Still, it was fun trying to get behind it with just direct fire... New Worms features, re: the new slimes: Starting slimes are now invisible, you're still able to determine which is which based on the smell, but it is no longer a major advantage in game play. Also, the worms can now get disabled and buried with the freeze fruit. No more hits in stupidly short span of time, again. 4, 3, 1, 2, 0, 5, 6, 0, 2. That was all the time I could take. The goblins are reworked. They are invincible on the front half of the board and, for the first time since i reworked them, can be killed unless in direct contact (ie, with a player's strike) with a base of their own. + getting hit indoors = bad (or at least you're gonna know about it when it happens). + getting shot from behind is much worse (since you probably can't see who's shooting you). + it'll look like you're having one of those infestopromotions, except no More reworked - no longer can you get a worm to attack an enemy above ground (it's impossible by default). Instead, your worms get fitted with a mech, allowing them to attack ground level
