Full disclosure of historical information and product detailsThe United States has imposed sanctions on three North Korean officials from its foreign trade ministry's division responsible for the exports of weapons of mass destruction and missile technology, according to the U.S. Treasury Department. U.S. Treasury said in a statement on Wednesday that Kim Chang-son, the division's deputy director general, and two North Korean nationals had been added to its sanctions list under a piece of U.S. legislation that targets proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. The sanctions prohibit U.S. persons from dealing with the men, known as the USBM, and subject them to U.S. secondary sanctions. They also prohibit U.S. persons from any transactions or dealings with North Korean nationals. The USBM falls under the purview of North Korea's National Security Agency, which is responsible for its WMD program and ballistic missile development. Three North Korean nationals have also been added to the U.S. sanctions list, the Treasury added. Two of them were senior officers in the ministry's Bureau of Weapons Supplies and seven named individuals were added to the list of sanctioned entities. U.S. Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said on Wednesday that the WMD and the missile technology lists were "targeted against the government of North Korea and their spy program." "It's our message to North Korea that you are not going to be able to develop weapons of mass destruction, nuclear weapons and missiles in the absence of continued nuclear and missile tests, continued ballistic missile tests," Mnuchin added. On Tuesday, the United States expelled the North Korean ambassador from Washington for his country's latest test-firing of a medium-range ballistic missile on July 4. The ambassador was also ordered to leave the U.S. immediately, a State Department statement said. A spokesman for North Korea's Foreign Ministry said that its envoy had been recalled in retaliation for the high-profile sanctions announced by the U.S. Treasury. North Korean ambassador Han Tae Song is "not allowed to leave the U.S.," spokesman Kim In-jun told reporters. He said the envoy's recall reflected the "undeserved" nature of the sanctions.Q: Multiple
